Apache.

A typical desktop font EULA will allow you to install the font on your computer for use with authoring tools including word processors, design tools and other applications that permit font selection. Fonts can also be used for creation of print documents, static images (JPEG, TIFF, PNG) and logos. The cost of a desktop font license is determined by the number of workstations on which the font is to be used. View the desktop EULA for this family.

Digital Ads license.

A digital ad license allows use of a font within banner ads or ads that are displayed in Web or mobile applications. When purchasing your digital ad license, you specify the number of impressions your campaign will require. If you're uncertain how many impressions you will need, you can purchase a small allotment and true up at the end of the month. Upon purchasing your license, you can download an ad kit containing Web font versions of the typefaces you licensed. You can upload your ad kit onto your ad network or embed the fonts directly into your ads. Impressions are valid for 4 years. View the MONOTYPE Digital Ads License Agreement.

Web font license.

Pay As You Go Webfonts are licensed from Fonts.com for use on websites in accordance with the conditions of the face declaration and are supported by all major browsers. When you've used all of your purchased pageviews, you can return to Fonts.com to purchase an incremental web font license to cover your future needs. Pageviews are valid for 4 years. Learn more about licenses for Web Fonts (Pay As You Go)

Mobile application license.

A mobile app license permits the embedding of a font into the iOS or Android mobile platforms for a set number of titles and an unlimited number of installations. A license for a single title can be used to create both an iOS and Android version of an app. Learn more about licenses for mobile apps.

Electronic Publication license.

An electronic publication license can be used for the embedding of fonts into electronic documents including e-books, e-magazines and e-newspapers. A license covers only a single title but is valid for the full operating life of that title. Every issue of an e-magazine, e-newspaper or other form of e-periodical is considered a separate, new publication. Format variations do not count as separate publications. If a publication is updated and distributed to existing users, a new license is not required. However, updated versions issued to new customers are defined as new publications and require a separate license. Learn more about licenses for eBooks.

Server license.

Server licenses authorize the installation of a font on a server that is accessed by remote users or website visitors. These licenses are commonly used by Web-based businesses providing goods that are personalized by its users such as business cards, images with captions and personalized merchandise. Users are not allowed to download the font file and the font may not be used outside the server environment. The font may not be employed for a software as a service (SaaS) application in which the service is the actual product and not the means of providing the product.

Server licenses cover a set number of CPU cores on production servers (development servers are not counted) on which the font is installed. The license is valid for 1 year. Learn more about server licenses.
